Proposal for a

COUNCIL REGULATION (EC)

protecting against the effects of the application of certain legislation of certain third countries, and actions based thereon or resulting therefrom

(presented by the Commission)

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

At its meeting of 15 July 1996, the Council of the European Union identified a range of measures that could be deployed by the EU in response to damage to the interests of EU companies resulting from the implementation by the US of the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (Libertad) Act (the Helms Burton Act). The Council instructed COREPER to make the necessary preparations for urgent Community and co-ordinated action.

One of the measures identified by the Council was "the use/introduction of legislation by the EU to neutralise the extra-territorial effects of the US legislation". The present Communication contains a proposal for a Council Regulation which would introduce legislation to this effect at EU level.

The proposed Community legislation aims to protect the legal order of the European Community and its external economic interests through a number of specific measures. It aims only to establish a defensive mechanism for the Community and persons resident or companies incorporated therein against unlawful and damaging effects of US legislation and actions

There are clear advantages to be gained from taking these measures at Community, rather than national, level. Politically they would constitute a clear and united signal to the US. They would also achieve a level of protection that could not be obtained through identical or comparable (co-ordinated) national measures, not least because certain Member States have indicated that they would have difficulty in introducing such legislation at national level, or in introducing it rapidly. Furthermore the assurance of identical conditions for economic operators within the Community will help to maintain the unity of the internal market, especially in circumstances where the US decided to avail of the power to differentiate between countries or companies in the continuation of the suspension of the right to file under Title III. Finally Community legislation would provide at Community level for a possibility to "claw back" amounts awarded to US citizens/companies by enabling Community persons to start legal proceedings anywhere in the Community where those US citizens/companies hold assets.

With regard to the individual Articles of the proposal, the following points can be made:

Article 1 defines the scope of the legislation and actions against which protection should be provided. The legislation concerned is to be listed in the Annex to the Regulation. At present, only the extra-territorial elements of US legislation regarding the unilateral embargo of Cuba are contained in the Annex. Any extension of the list in the Annex to other legislation (of the same third country or of another third country) would have to be decided by the Council on the basis of a proposal from the Commission. The same applies in case of the removal of items from the list of so-called primary legislation.

Where the legislation of the third country forms the basis of secondary legislation or similar instruments, the Commission may, in accordance with Article 7c, add this secondary legislation to the list in the Annex, in conformity with the Committee procedure contained in Article 8. Some secondary legislation has already been listed in the Annex.

In order to enable the Community to act quickly, adequately and proportionately to defend its interests, the Commission should be provided with the necessary information by the natural and legal persons within the Community whose economic interests are being negatively affected by the contested legislation. Article 2 provides for notification to the Commission to that effect.

Where the information provided under Article 2 might be of a confidential nature, an explicit guarantee of a confidential treatment is provided for in Article 3.

Article 4 aims at blocking the recognition or enforceability within the Community of judgements by courts or tribunals outside the Community, which give effect to the contested US legislation. The article will be effective especially in preventing the enforcement of judgements by US courts based on Title III of the Helms-Burton Act.

Non-compliance with the contested elements of the US legislation covered by the Regulation is obligatory under Article 5. The existence of such a rule is intended to be an effective defence in US courts in cases where persons might be sued in the US for such non-compliance. (Similar clauses are found in legislation of the United Kingdom and Canada).

Nevertheless, under certain circumstances, non-compliance might result in disproportionate damage to a person/company. For this reason the possibility is provided to obtain an authorisation for compliance. Such an authorisation would be given by the Commission in conformity with the Committee procedure contained in Article 8.

Article 6, the "claw-back" clause, enables the recovery of amounts obtained by US persons under the contested US legislation. This Article will be especially significant if the suspension of the possibility to start legal proceedings under Title III of the Helms-Burton Act is not extended beyond 1 February 1997. The present proposal follows the Canadian "blocking statute" in that it allows for the recovery of the full amount, and not only for the part of the amount that was obtained by doubling or tripling the original compensation/payment made under a judgement of a US court or tribunal.

The Commission will be entrusted with certain tasks, such as the amendment of the Annex of the Regulation and the authorisation of compliance. Article 7 also obliges the Commission to keep the Council informed on the effects of the contested US legislation and actions based thereon and to make a full report annually. Furthermore, the Commission shall publish in the Official Journal the judgements to which Article 4 applies.

In the first two tasks mentioned, the Commission shall be assisted by a Committee of representatives of the Member States, which should, in view of the importance of the measures to be taken by the Commission, operate in accordance with Article 2 (PROCEDURE II) of Council Decision 87/373/EEC of 13 July 1987 (OJ No L 197, p. 33, 18.7.1987).

Article 9 obliges Member States to determine penalties to be imposed in the event of breach of the provisions of the Regulation. Such penalties have to be effective, proportional and dissuasive.

Article 10 provides for the mutual exchange of information on the implementation of the Regulation between the Member States and the Commission so as to help prevent discrepancies in implementation.

As to the applicability of the Regulation, Article 11 stipulates that the Regulation not only has a territorial limitation but will also be limited to natural or legal persons, private or public, who are legally resident or incorporated and actually domiciled within the Community. Such a limitation is desirable to avoid natural or legal persons seeking protection under the Regulation, while their permanent interests lie outside the Community. This would be relevant in particular with regard to persons normally resident or incorporated within the US.

Nevertheless, consideration could be given to extending the applicability of the Regulation to persons, resident or incorporated in a third country with similar or identical legislation, and which would extend the applicability of its legislation to persons, resident or incorporated in the Community. In particular, such reciprocity could render the claw-back clause even more effective, because it would increase the possibilities to have access to assets of the US person/company from which amounts are to be recovered.

Whereas, under these exceptional circumstances, it is necessary to take action at the Community level protecting the established legal order and the external economic interests of the Community and the interests of these persons, in particular by removing, neutralising, blocking or otherwise countering the effects of the foreign legislation concerned;
