FOREWORD

(Background and description of the main types of the most recent agreements)

There are two reasons why these introductory remarks to the new edition of the directory of EC bilateral agreements are more detailed than in previous versions. First, this edition follows a survey carried out by the Treaties Office among recipients of the directory, with a view to clarifying requirements more precisely, and also reflects suggestions made direct by users; secondly, it covers a period of striking change in international relations (September 1991 to December 1992).¹

It therefore seemed useful to add a number of remarks on the geographic background to the agreements and to describe their broad features, with particular reference to the most recent agreements which have introduced new contractual elements, alongside the traditional forms.

The geopolitical changes which have taken place have been reflected first and foremost in efforts to construct a new order in Europe with, first, the signing of the EEA Agreement (from which Switzerland has subsequently withdrawn) and the Europe (association) Agreements which constitute in principle the forerunner to future accession (involving five countries initially, now become six with the division of Czechoslovakia, though the total could rise to twelve); in addition, there was the opening of accession negotiations with Austria, Norway, Sweden and Finland.

The future shape of this new order is not easy to discern at present, on the basis of the instruments signed, and even less so on the basis of those which have entered into force. In the meantime, however, consideration of the various kinds of agreements indicates how extensively the European Communities have used all the treaty-making power at their disposal, in the prevailing circumstances.

The two events which appear to have accentuated the innovatory trend in the use of different legal bases were, in the period covered by the directory, the break-up of the USSR and events in the former Yugoslavia, while at the same time trends already well under way in the Central and Eastern European countries had a bearing on the speed with which new negotiations were conducted and new agreements signed with those countries.

Following the Minsk agreement of 8 December 1991, which saw the dissolution of the USSR and at the same time the birth of the CIS, while establishing that the countries which were contracting parties to the Minsk agreement were the successors to all the agreements concluded by the former USSR, the Community opted for the renegotiation of separate agreements, particularly in view of the fact that the CIS, quite apart from its own varied history, did not comprise all the states which formerly belonged to the USSR but only ten of them.¹ These were recognized by the European Communities in January 1992 in accordance with the statement of 16 December 1991 adopted at the special European political cooperation meeting of ministers from the Member States, and contacts began immediately with a view to new agreements, which are most likely to be of the partnership type, though with a differentiated approach in each case in accordance with the political, economic and geographic characteristics of the relevant country, all the countries concerned being dealt with gradually as and when they are recognized by the Member States (NB. some countries formerly belonging to the USSR will not necessarily be members of the CIS). Solutions adopted will probably involve different kinds of agreements, depending on economic and political developments in the countries concerned (see Commission communication to the Council of 9 January 1992 and Council conclusions of 10 January 1992).

Negotiations began in October 1992 with five countries (Russia, Ukraine, Belarus, Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan). They should result in agreements of the kind already mentioned,² although they will not be identical. Further details will appear in the next edition of the directory, once the agreements have been signed.

It is already clear, however, notably in the case of the Russian Federation, that the negotiations which began on 25 November 1992 and continued on 22 and 23 December 1992 were aimed at a partnership and cooperation agreement involving a new approach in mutual relations based on shared political values (reaffirmation of CSCE principles, observance of the rule of law, human rights, a multiparty system and democratic elections) and also on wide-ranging economic, social and financial cooperation.

² This would put the new type of agreements midway between association agreements and "third generation" agreements, involving political dialogue and cultural cooperation.

The Baltic countries (Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania) are the furthest ahead in the matter of contractual commitments, an initial set of Agreements having been signed on 11 May 1992. They are trade and commercial and economic cooperation agreements (legal basis: Articles 113 and 235); they are non-preferential agreements containing a prices clause and a safeguard clause [it is worth noting that these countries are eligible for the technical assistance set up for the USSR, and also under the Phare programme and the GSP]. The Agreements are similar to the "first generation" agreements with the former Eastern bloc countries (now known as the Central and Eastern European countries) and the new arrangements are no more favourable than those the Baltic countries already enjoyed when they were part of the USSR; from the standpoint of international law, however, the Agreements are important in so far as they establish relations on an individual basis with the countries concerned (see above), with which the European Communities have also concluded separate Agreements on fisheries, an important activity in the Baltic.

The Agreement with Albania (signed on 11 May 1992 and in force since 1 December 1992) is wholly comparable to the trade and cooperation Agreements with the Baltic countries, notwithstanding the Mediterranean context and the specific characteristics of the country, which could be a factor making for other approaches.

The Agreements concluded with the Central and Eastern European countries are in a different category, partly because relations with those countries have in any case been well established for a number of years (see previous editions of the directory), albeit in a different form and with more limited aims.

Since 1992, Article 238 has been brought into use once more for association agreements, i.e. the "Europe" Agreements, considered as a forerunner to accession. These include the Agreements with the Visegrad countries, and also with Romania and Bulgaria; at 31 December 1992 they had not yet entered into force, because together they constitute a package and their individual ratification was held up by the division of Czechoslovakia and hence the new provisions needed to adjust the arrangements to the fact of the emergence of the two republics. Under each of these Agreements a form of free trade area will be established, an association council will ensure permanent official arrangements for political dialogue between the parties, and the preambles point towards the possibility of accession, not infrequently regarded as the ultimate aim. Pending formal ratification, interim agreements already in force provide for the abolition or reduction of some tariff barriers.

As all these instruments are dealt with individually in the following pages, no further comment is needed, although it is worth noting the speed of the Community response to delicate political situations, which may be helped towards a favourable outcome by the establishment of innovative and carefully constructed legal frameworks.

In addition to the turmoil in the Soviet Union, there was another instance of disintegration, namely in the former Yugoslavia. From the contractual standpoint, the first reaction on the part of the European Communities came with the termination of the Agreements with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (see OJ L 325/91, page 23), as pointed out in the previous edition.¹

As the political and military situation deteriorated in ways that are now well documented, the European Communities, while fully supporting the republics which cooperated in peacemaking and with the efforts to restore normality to the political situation, have so far found little scope for action involving legal instruments. What they could do would be to consider restoring at least the same arrangements as existed under the Agreements with the former federal Yugoslavia, or even going beyond those arrangements in some cases.² Only in the case of Slovenia, however, has this happened, in the form of an economic and commercial cooperation Agreement, together with a financial Protocol and an Agreement on transport, initialled on 5 November 1992 and due to be signed very soon. The future developments clause in this Agreement opens the prospect of subsequent progress towards a Europe (association) agreement (i.e. a forerunner to accession). Other agreements similar in scope could be envisaged with other countries emerging from the break-up of the former Yugoslavia, but establishment of the requisite political conditions is contingent on the events currently unfolding there.

* * *

² See statements made at the initialling and the signing of the Agreement with Slovenia.

To conclude this review of the various types of the most recently concluded agreements, it should be pointed out that in the case of countries in other parts of the world (such as Asia or Latin America), or at least outside Europe, here too the European Communities are refining the contractual arrangements (see, for example, the fishery Agreement signed with Morocco on 21 February 1992) and diversifying into different kinds of agreement. The "third generation" agreements are a case in point. These agreements, with their very extensive and carefully matched content, the concern to ensure political choices based on respect for human rights and democratic principles, cooperation covering aspects that can be regarded as economic only in a very broad sense (environment, tourism, culture and technology, training, the fight against drug abuse and organized crime, and so on), and also the future developments clause and the affirmation that any area of cooperation may in principle be included, constitute a fully comprehensive framework. The full provision made for management bodies, including specialized groups (normally a joint committee and any special joint working parties that are needed) together with measures to encourage foreign investment and contacts at all levels, including between economic agents and SME from both sides, make these agreements legal instruments that are readily usable in a varied range of contexts.

Seven of these agreements were signed in 1992, giving them a prominent place in the group of the most recent agreements (for details see individual entries).

On the logistic level, it should be noted that the directory contains only agreements in the strict sense of the term which were in force on the date specified. This explains the absence of regulations concerning the GSP and handicraft or handloom quotas, or contractual instruments of an administrative nature. The directory will in future be concerned increasingly with strictly contractual instruments only, in the EC external relations field, while also introducing a number of multilateral instruments.

Any information concerning specific aspects, questions of interpretation, trends etc. may be obtained direct from the Treaties Office (Mrs Colletti-Fossati, tel. 02/295.61.62). Additional copies of the directory may be obtained from the Office secretariat (enquiries to Mrs Guillaume-Junek, tel. 02/295.15.55, fax 02/295.65.05).

Agreement establishing the EEA
(Summary)

May 1992 saw the signing in Oporto of the Agreement on the EEA,¹ establishing the world's biggest integrated economic area (19 countries and 380 million people). The purpose of the Agreement is to establish a homogeneous area based on common rules and equal terms of competition, together with the means (including legal powers) required to bring it into effect and a legal framework ensuring equality, reciprocity and an overall balance of advantages, rights and obligations.

As mentioned in the previous edition (see I/438/91-EN), the Agreement makes provision as follows:

1. Free movement of goods. This objective was partially met by the application of the free trade Agreements concluded in 1972 with each of the EFTA countries, whereby customs duties on industrial products were abolished, but the aim will in future be extended to include a ban on quantitative restrictions and measures having equivalent effect; emphasis is also placed on improving the rules of origin through the introduction of an "EEA origin" mark. The Agreement is also categorical with regard to the prohibition of all discriminatory trade practices by state monopolies as regards terms of supply and outlets, anti-dumping measures and technical barriers to trade.

Border controls and formalities relating to goods will be simplified, the common market will be extended to include public procurement, and the simplified procedures already introduced under previous sector agreements on agri-food trade will be brought into general use.

2. Free movement of persons. Nationals of the EEA countries will be able to move freely and take up work on the territory of the 19 countries. Common rules are envisaged on access to social security benefits on a non-discriminatory and continuous basis. Freedom of establishment covers the right to set up business firms, agencies or branches, and access to the professions. The movement of young people will be assisted by the mutual recognition of qualifications, and also by special programmes and the Erasmus and Comett programmes.

3. Free movement of services. This concerns freedom to provide services without discrimination. The single authorization principle will be applied to credit institutions and, under the principle of supervision by the country of origin, each country will be responsible for supervising the activities pursued throughout the EEA by its own credit institutions. The Agreement also applies to insurance, including life and non-life insurance and motor insurance. There are also provisions relating to telecommunications and to inland, air and sea transport. Separate bilateral agreements on road transport have been concluded with Switzerland and Austria (see individual entries for details).
4. Free movement of capital. By establishing a framework for the free movement of capital under the Agreement, the aim is to abolish exchange controls directly affecting capital movements, along with other barriers of an indirect nature. Norway and Iceland are maintaining their current legislation in respect of investment and fishery-related transfers.
5. Competition. The Community provisions on monopolies and cartels are embodied in the EEA Agreement. The EFTA Surveillance Authority has a supervisory role and the EFTA Court has powers to settle disputes and other legal matters falling within its sphere of competence by their very nature.
6. Individual points. In order to increase trade in agricultural and fishery products, there are still many bilateral agreements, particularly in the case of specific products such as cheese, fruit and vegetable juice, wines and spirits, meat and so on. It is also proposed to admit into EFTA products from less developed regions, although this could present problems in view of the checks traditionally exercised by EFTA consumers. Progressive liberalization of trade is proposed for fishery products. The Agreement also includes provisions on the "horizontal" policies, i.e. on social policy, consumer protection, the environment, statistics and company law. The EFTA countries participate in Community programmes for research and technological development, education, training and youth, tourism, the audiovisual sector and civil protection, and are also involved in the process of endeavouring to reduce economic and social disparities between different regions.

The Agreement is intended to ensure uniform application of the provisions set out, while maintaining the independent decision-making powers of the contracting parties. For the purposes of transposing new Community legislation into law in the EFTA countries, consultation is encouraged at every stage where decisions are taken.

The bodies responsible for the functioning of the EEA are the EEA Council, the EEA Joint Committee, the EEA Joint Parliamentary Committee and the EEA Consultative Committee.

The EEA Council comprises the members of the EC Council and the EC Commission and a member of the government of each of the EFTA countries. Its role is a political one.

The Joint Committee consists of representatives of the contracting parties. Its tasks are more specific and will be geared to taking decisions when necessary on the adoption of new Community rules and the proper interpretation of the Agreement, and also to examining and settling any disputes.

The Parliamentary Committee consists of 66 members, 33 MEPs and 33 members of the parliaments of the EFTA countries. Its function will be to provide a forum for discussion and to establish guidelines, while the Consultative Committee will be concerned with dialogue between business and industry representatives from the EC and EFTA respectively.

The Agreement has not yet entered into force.

An additional protocol will have to be negotiated between the EEC and the EFTA countries in order to take account of the decision by Switzerland not to ratify the EEA Agreement. The protocol will form an integral part of the Agreement and will provide the technical and legal adjustments necessary for the new arrangements entailed by the fact that Switzerland will not be contributing to the funding for less developed areas under the cohesion policy.

The trade provisions of the Agreement entered into force on 1 October 1972. Extended to Spain and Portugal by exchange of letters, 1 January - 28 February 1986 (see OJ L 370/85). See specific Protocol for ensuing period.	Joint Committee (Articles 29-31). The future developments clause makes the role of the Joint Committee a fairly important one. It has the power to make decisions which are binding on both parties, subject to each having independent powers of final decision.	Non-specific or advanced trade agreement. This is a preferential agreement, establishing a free trade area and laying down a detailed schedule for the dismantling of tariffs, on completion of which industrial products circulate freely. The scope of this Agreement is wider than that of standard trade agreements, creating strong links between the two parties and embracing a great number of products. It does not contain a most-favoured-nation clause. The future developments clause states that if one of the contracting parties considers that it would be beneficial to develop the relationship defined by the Agreement, extending its scope to encompass sectors not originally covered, it may submit a reasoned request to that effect to the other party. The Joint Committee may be instructed to examine the matter. With this measure, the Agreement is made completely open. For amendments or derogations, see: OJ L 298/76, OJ L 338/76, OJ L 302/78. Protocol 3 to the Agreement has been amended on several occasions by Joint Committee decisions or by exchanges of letters. In 1984, it became necessary to consolidate all provisions then in force in a single document. This was done by means of an exchange of letters to which was annexed the new text of Protocol 3, which replaces that of the original Protocol 3 to the Agreement (see OJ L 323/84). See also OJ L 134/86, OJ L 47/86, OJ L 199/86, OJ L 100/87, OJ L 236/87, OJ L 388/87, OJ L 186/88, OJ L 149/88, OJ L 199/90, OJ L 176/90, OJ L 210/90, OJ L 336/90, OJ L 311/91 and OJ L 364/92. The future developments clause makes the role of the Joint Committee a fairly important one. It has the power to make decisions which are binding on the parties concerned, subject to each having independent powers of final decision.	Non-specific or advanced trade Agreement. This is a preferential agreement, establishing a free trade area and laying down a detailed schedule for the dismantling of tariffs, on completion of which industrial products circulate freely. The scope of this Agreement is wider than that of standard trade agreements, creating strong links between the two parties and embracing a great number of products. It does not contain a most-favoured-nation clause. The future developments clause states that if one of the contracting parties considers that it would be beneficial to develop the relationship defined by the Agreement, extending its scope to encompass sectors not originally covered, it may submit a reasoned request to that effect to the other party. The Joint Committee may be instructed to examine the matter. With this measure, the Agreement is made completely open. From 1 January 1986 to 26 February 1986, extension to Spain and Portugal by exchange of letters (OJ L 370/85). See specific Protocol for ensuing period.	Joint Committee (Art. 29-31). (The future developments clause makes the role of the Joint Committee a fairly important one). It has the power to make decisions which are binding on the parties concerned, subject to each having independent powers of final decision.	Non-specific or advanced trade agreement. This is a preferential agreement, creating a free trade area and laying down a detailed schedule for the dismantling of tariffs, on completion of which industrial products circulate freely. The scope of this Agreement is wider than that of standard trade agreements, creating strong links between the two parties and embracing a great number of products. It does not contain a most-favoured-nation clause. The future developments clause states that if one of the contracting parties considers that it would be beneficial to develop the relationship defined by the Agreement, extending its scope to encompass sectors not originally covered, it may submit a reasoned request to that effect to the other party. The Joint Committee may be instructed to examine the matter. With this measure, the Agreement is made completely open. For amendments and derogations see: OJ L 298/76, OJ L 338/76, OJ L 116/78, OJ L 303/78, OJ L 174/82, OJ L 337/83. For amendments introduced as a result of Norway's decision not to accede to the European Communities, see OJ L 106/75. Protocol 3 to the Agreement has been amended on several occasions by Joint Committee decisions or by exchanges of letters. In 1984, it became necessary to consolidate all provisions then in force in a single document. This was done by means of an exchange of letters to which was annexed the new text of Protocol 3, which replaces that of the original Protocol 3 to the Agreement (see OJ L 323/84). See also OJ L 47/86, OJ L 134/86, OJ L 199/86. For subsequent amendments see OJ L 100/87, OJ L 388/87, OJ L 100/88, OJ L 218/88, OJ L 311/91 and OJ L 364/92. Concerning the period between the date of signature and the date of entry into force, see Joint Declaration in OJ L 205/91, page 45.	Joint Committee (Art. 37).	Agreement of great legal interest. Its purpose is to enable non-life insurance companies based in the Community or in Switzerland to take up or pursue the business of insurance on the territory of the other contracting party, on equal terms and on a reciprocal basis. It is the first agreement concluded by the EEC on right of establishment in the insurance field or in the service sector generally. It establishes the non-discretionary possibility for insurance companies to set up agencies and branches on the territory of the other contracting party without the requirement for them to have a separate solvency margin.

OJ L 373/92 page 28	Agreement between the European Economic Community and the Swiss Confederation on the carriage of goods by road and rail	EEC Treaty Article 75	Signed on 2 May 1992. Scheduled to run for twelve years.	Joint Committee consisting of representatives of the Community and Switzerland (Article 18).	The purpose of the Agreement is to strengthen cooperation in the sector concerned, with special reference to Alpine transit traffic, through the introduction of coordinated measures to promote rail transport and combined transport. Questions concerning the environment and health are taken into consideration. The Agreement was not yet in force at 31 December 1992, although the Swiss parliament had ratified it by then. One reason was that, while not being a condition for the entry into force of the Agreement, further bilateral agreements are planned to back it up, in particular agreements ensuring access to the Community market for Swiss road and air transport operators.

Joint Committee (Article 23)	Non-preferential trade agreement. Contains most-favoured-nation clause, a safeguard clause, a price clause and a review clause, which would be activated if Bulgaria were to become a member of GATT. The Agreement lays down the arrangements for trade in industrial and agricultural products, with the exception of those covered by the ECSC or by the sectoral agreements on textile and agricultural products. As regards commercial cooperation, the Agreement provides for promotion, development and diversification of trade. Economic cooperation constitutes a significant section of the Agreement, with a large number of objectives covering a wide range of sectors and extending to training and research.

Entered into force on 1 April 1990 for an initial period of ten years. Automatically renewed unless denounced in writing six months before expiry.	Joint Committee (Art. 22)	First agreement concluded between the European Communities and the USSR. It is a non-preferential agreement covering trade in all types of products, with the exception of those covered by the ECSC Treaty, textile products and fisheries products, which are the subject of specific agreements. See also OJ L 138/90, page 1. Trade : progressive lifting of quantitative restrictions, to be re-examined in 1992. A safeguard clause is included in case of serious difficulties. Commercial cooperation : the scope of the objectives is among the most extensive to be found in Community agreements. Economic cooperation : one of the most important parts of the Agreement, specifying the appropriate aims, areas and measures for cooperation whilst leaving it to the Joint Committee to decide on the operations to be implemented. The Agreement contains 3 annexes, a joint declaration and an Agreement in the form of an exchange of letters concerning the experimental application of a new import scheme ("Testausschreibung", see OJ L 68/90 pages 18-19).

Entered into force on 1 December 1992. Concluded for an initial period of ten years.	Joint Committee (see Article 18). The Joint Committee has the power to set up special working parties (Article 18(e)).	The aim of the Agreement, at the current stage of political relations, is the harmonious development and diversification of trade, and the development of various types of commercial and economic cooperation. Article 1 refers to observance of democratic principles and human rights as an essential feature of the Agreement, and full reference is made in the preamble to the CSCE. The Agreement is similar to those signed with the Baltic states. A provision halfway between a "future developments" clause and the rebus sic stantibus clause provides scope for the contracting parties to amend the Agreement.

Joint Committee (Article 18)	Notwithstanding its ground-breaking nature, this Agreement is of the "first generation" type and does not introduce any striking innovations by comparison with the older agreements with the Eastern European countries, or with the treatment Estonia received as part of the USSR. It represents, however, the initial stage in contractual relations between the parties, and as such is of undoubted political significance. It does not cover Euratom matters, but there are appropriate arrangements in another context. There is no provision for financial cooperation, but Estonia has already received an ECU 40 million loan under the G-24 package for the Baltic countries, aimed at correcting the balance of payments.

Cooperation Council. The execution, management and maintenance of the schemes covered by the financial Protocol are the responsibility of the beneficiaries, subject to supervision by the EIB (Art. 5).	Forms an integral part of the EEC-Israel Agreement. The purpose of the Additional Protocol is to establish comprehensive cooperation. The financial Protocol, which expired on 31 October 1981, was renegotiated for the period 1 November 1981 - 31 October 1986, and was signed on 24 June 1983. It provides for loans from the EIB on normal terms for an aggregate amount of ECU 40 million. (See OJ L 335/83, page 8). Entered into force on 1 January 1984. For amendment to the Protocol, see OJ L 288/85. The third Protocol on financial cooperation was signed on 15 December 1987. It increased the final package to ECU 63 million. The fourth Protocol was signed on 12 June 1991 and is dealt with below. Additional financial assistance was also made available from the EC budget (approval given by the Council of the European Communities on 22 July 1991) as part of the "symmetrical assistance" to Israel and the Occupied Territories aimed at cushioning the adverse impact of the conflict. This assistance comprised a medium-term loan to Israel of ECU 160 million, plus an interest rate subsidy of ECU 27.7 million, and a grant of ECU 60 million for the people of the Occupied Territories, administered entirely through NGOs and without right of overview by the Israel authorities concerning Community operation in the Territories. In addition to this financial assistance, the Community intends to provide easier access for agricultural exports from the Occupied Territories by abolishing the remaining customs duties.

Cooperation Council (Articles 44-48) assisted by a Cooperation Committee or any other committee it may decide to set up (Art. 47).	Comprehensive cooperation agreement. Preceded by an Association Agreement signed in 1969 for a five-year period (see OJ L 197/69). The trade provisions of the Cooperation Agreement were implemented by means of an Interim Agreement (OJ L 141/76 and OJ L 159/77). For amendments see: OJ L 329/81, L 371/87 and L 364/92. The initial financial Protocol to the Agreement expired on 31 October 1981. The Protocol negotiated for the period 1 November 1981 - 31 October 1986 entered into force on 1 January 1983 (aggregate amount of ECU 50 million - see OJ L 337/82). The third financial Protocol was signed on 26 May 1988. It provided for a package of ECU 324 million, comprising ECU 173 million in grants from the Community budget and ECU 151 million in EIB loans from the Bank's own resources (see OJ L 224/88). See below for the fourth Protocol - OJ L 352/92, page 14. Morocco is also eligible for financing under the ECU 300 million package for the Mediterranean countries. In 1992, moreover, Morocco distanced itself somewhat from the broad EC-Maghreb approach and made fresh overtures to the Community. Joint exploratory talks were held on the possibility of a new agreement of the "free trade" or "partnership" type, comparable to those concluded with the Central and Eastern European countries, based on the following principles (Council, 11-12 May 1992): (1) political dialogue; (2) very extensive cooperation in all sectors of common interest; (3) financial cooperation; (4) progressive establishment of a free trade area.

Implemented provisionally by Agreement in the form of an exchange of letters signed on 21 December with retrospective effect (OJ L 217/92). It is one of the major fishery agreements, and was the forerunner of a new type of partnership. It provides for conservation and the efficient use of stocks and establishes a reasonable level of shipowners' dues. It covers some 750 Community vessels, Spanish for the most part. The financial compensation is set at ECU 102.1 million a year, in addition to the shipowners' dues. Fishing opportunities remain broadly at the same level as under the previous Agreement, with little increase. The changes concern essentially the approach to the fishery question, which is an important issue in the Mediterranean.

The Subcommittees on science and technology, industrial cooperation and trade cooperation were also retained. Article 32(3) refers to the possibility of establishing other subcommittees.	Replaces the non-preferential Agreement on economic, trade and development cooperation. It covers a wider field embracing a range of new areas of cooperation. It is a "third generation" agreement like others concluded recently, but contains new features designed to take account of the specific characteristics of the Andean countries. It is based on observance of democratic principles and human rights (see preamble and Article 1). The Agreement is very fully worked out, with very extensive areas of cooperation specified throughout the text. A future developments clause allows for the inclusion of sectors not covered. The financial resources available are not specified, but there is provision for a multiannual programme to be drawn up as a guide (Article 31) both by country and on a regional basis (see Article 33 concerning legal precedence).

This framework agreement takes precedence over any other agreements which may be concluded with the Member States, but does not otherwise preclude agreements compatible with it. The following are integral parts of the Agreement: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - a declaration by the European Economic Community concerning the generalized preferences system (Annex I); - a declaration by the Community concerning development cooperation (Annex II); and - an exchange of letters on sea transport. The parties undertake to establish the broadest possible economic cooperation, from which no fields are excluded in advance, taking into account their different levels of development (Art. 3). The need to implement agreements for the protection and promotion of private investment is reiterated (Art. 3(2)(e)). The priorities for cooperation work will be determined by the Central American countries. The volume of trade will be increased to the maximum possible level and trade barriers gradually removed. The contracting parties will grant each other most-favoured-nation treatment, taking account, however, of the individual characteristics of the region. As part of the programmes it carries out for the benefit of the ALA developing countries, the Community will provide development assistance to Central America with a view to promoting development and regional cooperation. Negotiations for new cooperation agreement on a broader and strengthened basis were authorized by the Council on 19 November 1992. Accompanied by an exchange of letters on shipping, which forms an integral part of the Agreement. The Agreement constitutes a highly structured framework for trade and economic cooperation in general, and for agricultural, industrial and technological cooperation in particular. It identifies various sectors and methods for cooperation. Owing to its future developments clause, supplementing most-favoured-nation treatment, the Agreement ranks amongst the most progressive of Community agreements. It is interesting to note the terms of Article 1 on the democratic basis for cooperation between the EC and Argentina and also those of Article 8 on "other agreements", which spells out the legal framework for the development of Community policy towards non-member countries. This was one of the first of the "third generation" agreements.

Not yet published	Agreement on fishing between the European Economic Community and the Argentine Republic	EEC Treaty Article 43	Initialled on 30 November 1992 and in the process of being concluded. Once in force it will run for five years.		The first fisheries agreement between the EEC and a Latin American country. It reflects the spirit of the "second generation" agreements, i.e. it provides for joint ventures between Community and Argentine shipowners and for consortia eligible for financial assistance from the EEC. The arrangements are wholly original, aimed at promoting stable relations, establishing a framework for scientific and technical cooperation and encouraging the supply of fishery products to the Community market, while reducing surplus fishing capacity. They also provide access to very valuable fishing opportunities for the whole of the Community fleet. The Agreement also covers bilateral cooperation on conservation, the efficient exploitation of stocks and research programmes, plus port improvements and vocational training, with ECU 28 million being made available by the Community.

Joint Cooperation Committee (Art. 17)	An exchange of letters on maritime transport is annexed to the Agreement, which is a "third generation" agreement based on observance of democratic principles and human rights (Article 1). The Agreement establishes very comprehensive arrangements concerning economic cooperation (Art. 2), industrial cooperation (Art. 3) and measures for promoting and improving investment relating to the environment. Moreover, further provisions may be added subsequently under the terms of the future developments clause. It also provides for cooperation on science and technology, trade, social development, government and information and communication. Art. 15 is concerned with the integration of any action taken at regional level. However, the Agreement does not give details as to resources; Art. 16 merely requires that they be "appropriate". Entered into force on 1 October 1985 for five years. Renewable tacitly on a yearly basis. Renewed.	Joint Committee, whose task it is to examine new opportunities for developing trade and economic cooperation and to make recommendations (Article 15).	Framework cooperation Agreement providing for future developments and replacing the previous trade Agreement of 3 April 1975. It identifies the objectives and the means of achieving them in the field of economic and trade cooperation. Non-preferential. With regard to trade-related matters, the terms of the Agreement are the same as those of the 1978 non-preferential Trade Agreement. The most-favoured-nation clause, amongst others, is unchanged. With regard to economic cooperation, the Agreement states that the contracting parties will develop cooperation in the following areas: industry and mining; agriculture; science and technology; energy; transport and communications; environmental protection; and cooperation in developing countries generally. The parties also agree to encourage the various forms of industrial and technical cooperation, promote investment and improve the climate for investment. The Community has continued its development activities in China, both within the framework of its aid programme for ALA developing countries and also in any other potential areas for cooperation with China. The system of generalized preferences has been applied to China since 1980, since when the range of products entering the Community duty free under the system has been steadily expanding from year to year. At its meeting on 12 January 1987, the Joint Committee noted, amongst other things, a further increase in the volume of trade, accompanied by an appreciable reduction in the Chinese deficit. This was largely due to an increase in Chinese exports to the Community. Domestic political events in China in 1989 dealt a harsh blow to EEC-China relations, although opinion is now shifting towards a more realistic approach and a wide range of contacts have resumed on a regular basis.

Implemented from 1 January 1989 for a period of four years.	Textile Committee (Art. 16(1)) Consultation procedures (Art. 16(2))	The Agreement, concluded on the same basis as the previous one, is a standard Agreement (MFA framework), albeit containing certain provisions relating to cooperation. The Agreement provides for increases in basic quotas, but also for new restrictions. In addition quotas are imposed on a number of products the movement of which was hitherto unrestricted, as a result of amendments to the system of textile product categories made necessary by the introduction of the Harmonized System nomenclature. China also undertakes to supply more raw silk. The Agreement strikes a balance between the Community's need to take account of the situation in its industrial sector, the importance of China as a supplier and of trade with China, given its special situation. From the legal point of view, it is interesting to note the clause providing for consultation to resolve problems relating to intellectual property.

Replaces the 1973 Agreement (see OJ L 82/74) and has a different basis. Cooperation extends to a large number of sectors; no field is excluded under the future developments clause. With regard to trade, the Agreement contains all of the provisions included in the previous cooperation Agreement, including the most-favoured-nation clause. It also stresses the contracting parties' intention to promote the development and diversification of trade between them to the highest possible level by means of a whole series of specific measures (Art. 4). Economic cooperation is to cover all areas where such cooperation would be of benefit to both parties. The purpose is to encourage economic development on both sides (promotion of industrial cooperation, technology transfers, promotion of investment, contacts between economic operators - including SME - seminars, etc). The Agreement also provides a firm legal basis for technological and scientific cooperation (Art. 5). The amount of development aid given to India makes it one of the main beneficiaries amongst the ALA developing countries. Aid takes the form of direct concessional transfers or institutional or other forms of finance (Article 6). The Agreement covers a large number of sectors, many of which are related to agriculture. Negotiations for a new "third generation" agreement, on a broader and strengthened basis, were concluded on 15 December 1992 with the initialling of an agreement, which is still awaiting signature.

This Agreement builds on the 1976 trade cooperation Agreement and covers two new areas, namely economic and development cooperation. It also reinforces cooperation in the fields of trade and development. The Agreement does not exclude any area which could be covered by economic cooperation and which falls within the Community's powers. The contracting parties agree to promote industrial cooperation between economic operators, investment and joint research programmes. The Community undertakes to do everything possible to step up the financial and technical assistance it gives to development programmes in Pakistan (Pakistan is a beneficiary of the aid programme for ALA developing countries). With regard to trade, (the EC is Pakistan's leading trading partner), the contracting parties confirm the provisions of the 1976 Agreement and reinforce their commitment to consult each other problems on any arising at either bilateral or multilateral level. In addition, a trade promotion programme has been encouraged by the Joint Commission. No need has yet arisen for a new agreement.

LOMÉ CONVENTION

Remarks

Comprehensive agreement, officially known as a "cooperation Convention" (Art. 1, first paragraph).

Differs from previous Conventions in that it is valid for ten years. What really distinguishes the fourth Convention from its predecessors, however, is its new approach, centred around people and the quality of life. Amongst the more important of the new features are: the new structural adjustment facility; the inclusion of a new sphere of activity, i.e. environmental protection; the dropping of the requirement to pay back STABEX transfers and SYSMIN loans; and concern about developing the service sector.

The main text of the Convention is divided into five parts.

Part One contains the general provisions of ACP-EEC cooperation (this section highlights the approach to development "centred on man" and describes the new-style guidelines).

Part Two sets out the areas of ACP-EEC cooperation, namely: the environment (Articles 33-41); agricultural cooperation, food security and rural development (Articles 42-57); development of fisheries (Articles 58-68); cooperation on commodities (Articles 69-76); industrial development, manufacturing and processing (Articles 77-98); mining development (Articles 99-104); energy development (Articles 105-109); enterprise development (Articles 110-113); development of services (Articles 114-134); and trade development (Articles 135-138). The human and cultural dimension is dealt with in Articles 139-149, Articles 150-152 are concerned with education and training and scientific cooperation while Articles 153-155 cover the role of women, health and nutrition, population and demography. Regional cooperation between ACP States is included in a separate section of its own (Articles 156-166).

Part Three (Articles 167-337), on the instruments of cooperation, examines trade cooperation, cooperation in the field of commodities and financial instruments. See in particular Articles 213 on sugar, 186 et seq. on Stabex, 214 et seq. on the Sysmin facility and, in Title III, 220-230 on development finance cooperation.

For the completely new section on problems relating to debt and structural adjustment, see Articles 239-250. The provisions concerning investment are set out in Articles 258-272. (There is no protection clause as such but the Convention does establish the framework for such protection.) Articles 291-310 relate to the financing agreements and the procedures reiterating rules already established.

Articles 311-323 lay down administrative arrangements. See in particular Articles 324-327 on the ACP-EEC Committee. Title IV contains special provisions for the least-developed, landlocked and island ACP States and gives a list of them as adopted for the purposes of the Convention.

Part Four of the Convention is concerned with the institutions (see previous page) and how they function (Articles 338-355). Part Five contains the final provisions (Articles 356-369).

The Convention is accompanied by a Financial Protocol and nine other Protocols (Protocol 1 concerning the definition of the concept of "originating products" and methods of administrative cooperation, Protocol 2 on the operating expenditure of the joint institutions, Protocol 3 on privileges and immunities, Protocol 4 on the implementation of Article 178, Protocol 5 on bananas, Protocol 6 on rum, Protocol 7 on beef and veal, Protocol 8 containing the text of Protocol 3 on ACP sugar appearing in the ACP-EEC Convention of Lomé signed on 28 February 1975 and the corresponding declarations annexed to that Convention, and Protocol 9 concerning products within the province of the European Coal and Steel Community). There is also a Final Act, with 78 annexes and the minutes of the signing of the Convention contain eight annexes.

LOME CONVENTION

Remarks

The Financial Protocol annexed to the Convention covers financial assistance for the first five-year period. The total amount is ECU 12 000 million, of which ECU 10 800 million from the Fund, allocated as follows:

1. ECU 7 995 million in the form of grants, including ECU 1 150 million for structural adjustment support;
2. ECU 825 million in the form of risk capital;
3. ECU 1 500 million for Stabex and ECU 480 million for Sysmin; and
4. ECU 1 200 million in the form of EIB loans, to be administered by the Bank.

The increase in financial assistance for the OCT (amounting to ECU 165 million, of which ECU 140 million is administered by the Fund and the remaining ECU 25 million in loans by the EIB) is even greater than for the ACP States. The new arrangements are particularly advantageous for the OCT, which benefit from both the Lomé Convention and from Community integration. Particular emphasis has been placed on promoting industrial development and small and medium-sized businesses, which also benefit from the ad hoc information network set up by the EEC.

The Internal Agreement on the financing and administration of Community aid under the Convention entered into force pursuant to Article 35(1) on 29 January 1992.

It applied retrospectively from 1 January 1990.

In the absence of provisions, see Protocol 7 to the Lomé Convention of 31 October 1979.	See parallel ad hoc agreement with India. This Agreement falls within the framework of the Protocol on sugar annexed to the Lomé Convention, which commits the EEC to the purchase of some 1.3 million tones of sugar, expressed in terms of white sugar, at guaranteed prices. If a country fails to deliver the agreed quantity, the full quantity for that country is reduced in respect of future delivery periods by the quantity not delivered and the Commission may decide (Article 7(4)) to reallocate that quantity. Unrefined sugar prices for the 1987/88 sugar marketing year were set at ECU 44.92/100kg. This was the outcome of the last negotiations to result in an agreement which was formally concluded by the Council (see OJ L 179/88, page 48).

Joint Committee (Art. 10)	The earlier Protocol (annexed to the Agreement) is repealed and replaced by this Protocol (Article 7). Fishing rights: deep-water shrimp vessels: 1 100 GRT/month; deep-water and shallow-water shrimp vessels: 3 700 GRT/month; ocean-going tuna seiners: 44 vessels. For 1990, however, Community vessels may not take more than 1 200 tonnes of deep-water shrimps, 1 000 tonnes of shallow-water shrimps or 200 tonnes of deep-water crabs. These limits were to be reviewed for the following year by the Joint Committee. Financial compensation is set at ECU 4 300 000, payable in two annual instalments. It can be raised by ECU 50/tonne for quantities in excess of 6 000 tonnes of tuna species. Article 4 (see also corrigendum in OJ L 35/91) provides for ECU 950 000 for scientific programmes.
