1. INTRODUCTION

The European Council of 4-5 November 2004 endorsed the Hague Multiannual Programme for strengthening the area of freedom, security and justice.

The Hague Programme is the successor to the Tampere Programme, which was endorsed by the European Council on 15-16 October 1999. This was the first multiannual programme to fix priorities for an area of freedom, security and justice. The Commission evaluated the results of the last five years in its Communication of 2 June 2004<sup>1</sup>.

The Hague Programme marks the end of a cycle and the beginning of a new one. It is no surprise, therefore, that this second multiannual programme builds upon the positive experience of the past five years. In order to carry out the Hague Programme, the European Council invited the Commission to present an Action Plan to the Council in which the aims and priorities of the Programme are to be translated into concrete actions, including a timetable for the adoption and implementation of all actions.

This Action Plan is therefore composed of two parts. The first part (chapter 2) gives an overview of the issues at stake, and of some of the most important aspects of the Programme. It also identifies, from among the orientations of the Programme, ten specific priorities upon which the Commission believes efforts for the next five years should be concentrated. The second part (chapter 3) consists of an annex listing the concrete measures and actions to be taken over the next five years. This list closely adheres to the structure of the Hague Programme.

It is also important to note that this Action Plan needs to be read in conjunction with other Plans and Strategy papers regarding specific policy issues in the area of freedom, security and justice: it will be the Commission's task to ensure the general coherence of these exercises. Some of these documents have been presented by the Commission very recently or are about to be presented (the EU Action Plan on Drugs of 14 February 2005<sup>2</sup>, following the new European Strategy on Drugs 2005-2012; the Communication on Perspectives for the development of mutual recognition of decisions in criminal matters and of mutual confidence and the Communication "Developing a Strategic Concept on Tackling Organised Crime").

The Hague Programme calls for a mid-term review of the Action Plan by 1 November 2006. To that end, the Commission will timely present a report on the progress made and on the possible adjustments needed to the Programme.

2. THE ACTION PLAN IMPLEMENTING THE HAGUE PROGRAMME: TRANSLATING POLITICAL PRIORITIES AND MONITORING IMPLEMENTATION

2.1. The political mandate of the Hague Programme

The Hague Programme reaffirms the importance that the European Union attaches to the area of freedom, security and justice, placing it as a high priority on the Union's agenda – not only because it figures among the fundamental objectives of the Union, but in particular because it is at the heart of citizens' interests.

The Programme sets out the framework and main objectives for the next five years. It seeks to respond to the expectations of our citizens and deals with all aspects of policies relating to the area of freedom, security and justice and it addresses both general orientations (fundamental rights, implementation and evaluation) and specific orientations, focusing on (1) strengthening freedom<sup>3</sup> (2) strengthening security (3) strengthening justice and (4) external relations. The European Strategy on Drugs 2005-2012 endorsed by the European Council in December 2004 is an integral part of the Hague programme.

The Programme calls for a Strategy covering the external dimension of Union policy on freedom, security and justice, and asks the Commission to present it in close collaboration with the Council Secretary-General/High Representative. It should reflect the Union's special relations with third countries and regions and focus on the specific needs for JHA cooperation with them. As a first step, the Commission will present a Communication to prepare the Strategy which complements this Action Plan.

The European Council "noted that due account should be taken of the financial implications for the multiannual agenda in the area of freedom, security and justice." It is clear that one of the essential pre-conditions for achieving the policy objectives which have been fixed is to match these objectives with adequate financial resources. The Commission has presented on 6 April 2005 three Framework Programmes on (1) Solidarity and Management of Migration Flows, (2) Security and Safeguarding Liberties and (3) Fundamental Rights and Justice<sup>4</sup>. The three proposals are fully in line with the strategic priorities set by the Hague Programme.

The Commission's evaluation of the Tampere Programme of 2 June 2004<sup>5</sup> and the Recommendation adopted by the European Parliament on 14 October 2004<sup>6</sup> have been taken into account in the Hague Programme, in particular in connection with the introduction of the procedure under Article 251 TEC (co-decision procedure) for areas of Title IV TEC. Given the political impetus from the European Council, on 22 December 2004 the Council was able to adopt a decision applying co-decision and qualified majority voting to all Title IV measures with the exception of legal immigration, as of 1 January 2005<sup>7</sup>. This is the first success of the Hague Programme. Not only is the enhanced role of the European Parliament an improvement in democratic legitimacy, but the rate of completion of the work is likely to increase with the abolition of unanimous voting.

However, the Council Decision of 22 December 2004 did not include, as foreseen by Article 67 of the Treaty, any provision adapting the powers of the Court. The Commission continues to believe that in this area, which so closely touches the right of individuals, an increased access to the Court of Justice is essential. The matter of increased access to the Court of Justice for preliminary rulings is an issue which must call for consideration particularly – as is recognised by the fourth paragraph of Article III-369 of the Constitution and referred to in the Hague Programme – given the need to ensure speedy treatment of such cases.

2.2. The Hague Programme and the Constitution

The Hague Programme reflects the ambitions expressed in the Constitution which, subject to national ratification procedures, should enter into force on 1 November 2006, bringing about a significant revision of the existing provisions governing the area of freedom, security and justice and the integration of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. The innovations arising from the Constitution could not be applied before the end of the ratification period. Coherently, the Commission is committed to undertake the necessary preparatory work so that measures could be taken immediately after the entry into force of the Constitution.

2.3. Ten priorities for the next five years: a partnership for European renewal

In preparing the Action Plan implementing the Hague Programme, the Commission has provided a list of the actions which the Programme calls for. The achievement of the ambitious objectives of the Hague Programme should be ensured through a collective effort of the Council, the European Parliament and the Commission within the framework of a strong and effective partnership.

Within the strategic objectives already agreed upon by the European Council in the Hague Programme in view of the strengthening of the area of Freedom, Security and Justice, and which are translated into concrete measures in chapter 3 (annex) following the order of the Hague Programme itself, the Commission has identified ten priorities on which it believes the collective efforts must be particularly concentrated in the next five years. The ten priorities are equally important and cover the whole spectrum of the Hague objectives. This exercise will avoid a dispersal of efforts and ensure that the Programme's aims are achieved. The Commission also believes that it is crucial to identify the added value at European level of any legislative and non-legislative initiative to be taken in the area of Freedom, Security and Justice, by fully applying the principle of subsidiarity and exploiting the better regulation mechanisms as well as by conducting impact assessment on the main proposals to be presented.

The Strategic Objectives 2005-2009<sup>8</sup> refers specifically to the development of a partnership in view of the strengthening of an area of Freedom, Security and Justice. Within the objectives of (a) strengthening freedom (b) strengthening security (c) strengthening justice, the main ten priorities identified by the Commission can be summarised as follows:

<sup>8</sup> “Strategic objectives 2005-2009, Europe 2010: a partnership for European renewal” - COM(2005) 12, 26.1.2005.

(1) Fundamental rights and citizenship: creating fully-fledged policies

Ensure the full development of policies monitoring and promoting respect for fundamental rights for all people and of policies enhancing citizenship.

(2) The fight against terrorism: working toward a global response

Focus on different aspects of prevention, preparedness and response in order to further enhance, and where necessary complement, Member States capabilities to fight terrorism, in relevant areas such as recruitment, financing, risk analysis, protection of critical infrastructures and consequence management.

(3) A common asylum area: establish an effective harmonized procedure in accordance with the Union' values and humanitarian tradition

Work towards the establishment of a common asylum area taking into account the humanitarian tradition and respect of international obligations of the Union and the effectiveness of a harmonised procedure.

(4) Migration management; defining a balanced approach

Define a balanced approach to migration management by developing a common immigration policy which addresses legal migration at Union level, while further strengthening the fight against illegal migration, smuggling and trafficking in human beings, in particular women and children.

(5) Integration: maximising the positive impact of migration on our society and economy

Develop supportive measures to help Member States and deliver better policies on integration so as to maximise the positive impact of migration on our society and economy and to prevent isolation and social exclusion of immigrant communities. This will contribute to understanding and dialogue between religions and cultures, based on the fundamental values of the Union.

(6) Internal borders, external borders and visas: developing an integrated management of external borders for a safer Union

Further develop an integrated management of external borders and a common visa policy, while ensuring the free movement of persons (people-to-people).

(7) Privacy and security in sharing information: striking the right balance

Strike the right balance between privacy and security in the sharing of information among law enforcement and judicial authorities, by supporting and encouraging a constructive dialogue between all parties concerned to identify balanced solutions, while fully respecting fundamental rights of privacy and data protection, as well as the principle of availability of information as laid down in the Hague Programme.

(8) Organised crime: developing a strategic concept

Develop and implement a strategic concept on tackling organised crime at EU level. Make full use of and further develop Europol and Eurojust.

(9) Civil and criminal justice: guaranteeing an effective European area of justice for all

Guarantee an European area of justice by ensuring an effective access to justice for all and the enforcement of judgments. Approximation will be pursued, in particular through the adoption of rules ensuring a high degree of protection of persons, with a view to building mutual trust and strengthening mutual recognition, which remains the cornerstone of judicial cooperation. Improve the EU substantive contract law.

(10) Freedom, Security and Justice: sharing responsibility and solidarity

Give practical meaning to notions of shared responsibility and solidarity between Member States by providing adequate financial resources that can meet the objectives of Freedom, Security and Justice in the most efficient way.

(1) Fundamental rights and citizenship: creating fully-fledged policies

Fundamental rights are at the core of the Union's values. Full development of policies monitoring and promoting respect for fundamental rights for all people and of policies enhancing citizenship must be ensured.

The Constitution places the individual at the heart of the European project by integrating the Charter of Fundamental Rights and by providing for accession to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

Furthermore, it is important to provide decision-makers with accurate and reliable data on the respect for fundamental rights in the Union. The conversion of the European Monitoring Centre for Racism and Xenophobia toward the establishment of a fully-fledged Fundamental Rights Agency will be another important element in the promotion and protection of fundamental rights.

Among those rights, the Commission will devote special attention to the rights of the child, in view of their protection, since children are among the most vulnerable in the population. The Constitution explicitly includes "the promotion and the protection of the rights of the child" among the objectives of the Union.

Furthermore, the Commission will, in collaboration with member States, pursue its efforts to combat violence against women and provide support to victims.

The Commission will pursue its action to combat discrimination in all its forms. This will include ensuring effective implementation and enforcement of EU anti-discrimination legislation.

Particular attention must be dedicated to the protection of personal data, which has been recognised by the Charter of Fundamental Rights and by the Constitution as a fundamental right of its own, distinct from the right to privacy.

Citizenship of the Union entails a number of crucial rights such as free movement within the EU, diplomatic and consular protection or voting rights in European Parliament and local elections. Measures are envisaged in all of these areas in order to improve the exercise of citizenship rights of EU citizens.

(2) The fight against terrorism: working toward a global response

A global response is required to address terrorism. The expectations that citizens have of the Union cannot be ignored, and nor can the Union fail to respond to them.

Attention must focus on different aspects of prevention, preparedness and response to further enhance, and where necessary complement, Member States' capabilities to fight terrorism, concentrating particularly on recruitment, financing, risk analysis, protection of critical infrastructures and consequence management.

The fight against terrorism calls for an integrated and coherent approach, covering a wide range of issues which the Hague Programme has identified. A crucial area that demands the Union's attention is cooperation between the different competent authorities of Member States, most notably in exchanging information relevant for the investigation of terrorist activities.

It is also of the utmost importance to understand the complex phenomenon that is terrorism in Europe: the processes of indoctrination and recruitment and the type of environment that allows terrorist ideas and movements to take root. Efforts in the fight against the financing of terrorism should be further pursued.

The efforts of Member States and the EU must be complemented by external cooperation, working with third countries to fight terrorism, notably assisting them in funding counter-terrorism and capacity-building projects, as well as tackling the roots of terrorism.

(3) A common asylum area: establish an effective harmonized procedure in accordance with the Union's values and humanitarian tradition

The establishment of a Common European Asylum System is another priority. In the next few years, the work will focus on concluding the evaluation of the first phase instruments by 2007, and to submit the second phase instruments and measures in developing a common asylum policy, which will seek to establish a common procedure and uniform status for persons benefiting from asylum or subsidiary protection before the end of 2010.

Administrative cooperation between the national services of Member States must be reinforced, and funds earmarked to assist Member States in processing the applications and the reception of third country nationals. The Hague Programme has also indicated the need to study the possibility of joint processing of asylum applications.

The development of EU-Regional Protection Programmes and Resettlement Schemes is being launched by the Commission.

(4) Migration management: defining a balanced approach

A new balanced approach to migration management, dealing both with legal and illegal migration, needs to be defined and a common immigration policy addressing the situation of legal migrants at Union level needs to be developed, while further strengthening the fight against illegal migration, migrant smuggling and trafficking in human beings, notably women and children.

While the decision as to how many migrants coming from third countries can be admitted to each Member State to seek work in an employed or self-employed capacity remains a national decision, an area of free movement demands a common immigration policy, covering admission procedures and criteria and delivering a secure legal status and a guaranteed set of rights to assist the integration of those who are admitted. Furthermore, immigration plays a fundamental role in the economies and societies of Member States as well as of countries of origin and transit, which also justifies the need for a common approach based on a rational use of an immigrant workforce.

The human, social and economic costs of illegal migration – not only in host countries but also in countries of origin and transit - are extremely high, calling for rules on return procedures, the speeding up of the conclusion of readmission agreements, and further coordination to combat smuggling and trafficking in human beings. However, the respect for the rights and dignity of third country nationals, including in an irregular situation in the Union must always remain a guiding principle in EU policy. In particular, the treatment of persons trafficked into or within the EU must respect their specific situation and human rights standards.

A common immigration policy cannot confine itself to admission and return policies: successful management of migrations flows must become an integral element and comprise a serious investment in relations with third countries, both of origin and of transit, notably through assistance and cooperation, in the mutual interest of third-countries and of the Union.

(5) Integration: maximising the positive impact of migration on our society and economy

In order to maximise the positive impact of immigration on our society and economy and, as a matter of utmost importance, to prevent isolation and social exclusion of immigrant communities, it is necessary to support and encourage Member States to deliver better policies on integration. A successful integration policy must contribute to understanding and dialogue between religions and cultures.

The integration of third-country nationals requires mobilising a range of mainstream policies, also including employment and education.

Greater contact between national authorities is needed in order to exchange experiences and information on integration.

It is therefore necessary to establish a European Framework on Integration based upon the common principles endorsed by the European Council ensuring respect for EU values and upholding non-discrimination.

(6) Internal borders, external borders and visas: developing an integrated management of external borders for a safer Union

An area where the free movement of persons is fully ensured demands further efforts leading to integrated control of the access to the territory of the Union, based on an integrated management of external borders, a common visa policy and with the support of new technologies, including the use of biometric identifiers.

Following the Union's latest enlargement, it will be a priority to achieve internal free movement, and to be able to fully abolish controls of persons at internal border. In this sense, the establishment of SIS II and the smooth running of evaluations, foreseen by the Accession treaties, are fundamental in order to pave the way for the new Member States.

An important step in the management of external borders is the creation of the Border Management Agency, which will be responsible for coordinating and assisting Member States' action in surveillance and controlling of external borders.

The development of an effective visa policy will be facilitated through the availability of the Visa Information System. This will call for the reinforcement of the cooperation between Member States to create common application centres for visas, which could be a first step towards a future European common consular service.

Another important element is the inclusion of biometric identifiers in travel and identification documents, enhancing document security while maintaining full respect for fundamental rights. Furthermore, possible synergies between EU and national information systems, based on interoperability, should be fully exploited.

(7) Privacy and security in sharing of information: striking the right balance

Effective maintenance of law and order and the investigation of cross-border criminality in an area of free movement cannot be allowed to be impeded by cumbersome procedures for the exchange of information.

The Union should support and encourage a constructive dialogue between all parties concerned to identify balanced solutions, fully respecting fundamental rights to privacy and data protection, as well as the principle of availability of information.

The principle of availability, as laid out in the Hague Programme, states that information for law enforcement purposes needed by the authorities of one Member State will be made available by the authorities of another Member State, subject to certain conditions. The Commission will present proposals to this end, including the possibility of mutual consultation of databases of Member States.

In this area, the right balance between privacy and security should be found in sharing information among law enforcement and judicial authorities.

The balance between privacy and security should also be carefully considered in the area of the exchange of airlines passenger data for aviation security and anti-terrorism purposes.

(8) Organised crime: developing a strategic concept

A strategic concept on tackling organised crime at EU level will be developed and implemented. To this end, the Commission will shortly present a Communication “Developing a Strategic Concept on Tackling Organised Crime”. This includes measures designed for improving knowledge of the phenomenon and for strengthening prevention, investigation and cooperation on organised crime within the EU. The strategy must also contemplate intensifying cooperation with third countries and international organisations on this issue as one of its priorities.

Fighting organised crime requires improving cooperation between law enforcement services (police, justice, customs) as well as making full use of and further developing Europol and Eurojust. Working towards a European criminal intelligence model is one of the more important tasks ahead in this field and will require the shared efforts of Member States, EU institutions and bodies.

(9) Civil and criminal justice: guaranteeing an effective European area of justice for all

A European area of justice is more than an area where judgements obtained in one Member State are recognised and enforced in other Member States, but rather an area where effective access to justice is guaranteed in order to obtain and enforce judicial decisions. To this end, the Union must envisage not only rules on jurisdiction, recognition and conflict of laws, but also measures which build confidence and mutual trust among Member States, creating minimum procedural standards and ensuring high standards of quality of justice systems, in particular as regards fairness and respect for the rights of defence. Mutual understanding can be further pursued through the progressive creation of a “European judicial culture” that the Hague Programme calls for, based on training and networking. A coherent strategy in the EU’s relations with third countries and international organisations is also needed.

In the field of civil justice, completion of the Programme on mutual recognition of decisions in civil and commercial matters is of the utmost importance. It will involve the adoption of legislative proposals already presented by the Commission, or in the process of being put forward, and launching consultations in order to prepare new legislation not yet subject to mutual recognition (such as family property issues, successions and wills). Another fundamental aspect to be addressed is the enforcement of judicial decisions and mutual recognition of public and private documents. Regarding the EU substantive contract law, a Common Frame of Reference (CFR), to be used as a toolbox to improve coherence and quality of EU legislation, will be adopted in 2009 at the latest.

Regarding criminal justice, approximation and the establishment of minimum standards of several aspects of procedural law (such as ne bis in idem, handling evidence or judgements in absentia) are instrumental in building mutual confidence and pursuing mutual recognition. Concerning the latter, several actions must be carried forward in order to ensure efficient and timely action by law enforcement authorities (such as mutual recognition of non-custodial pre-trial supervision measures, or recognition and execution of prison sentences) and, more generally, to replace traditional mutual assistance with new instruments based on mutual recognition. Eurojust should be considered as the key actor for developing European judicial cooperation in criminal matters. Its role should be supported and its potentialities fully exploited in the light of the experience acquired and in view of future developments. In this context, the Commission will also follow up its previous work and the possibilities afforded by the Constitution, as regards improving the protection of the Union’s financial interests.

(10) Sharing responsibility and solidarity

No policy objective can be reached without adequate financial resources and the Hague Programme established a clear connection between those two elements. To this end, in April 2005 the Commission presented three Framework Programmes, which seek to give practical meaning to the concepts of shared responsibility and solidarity between Member States by reviewing the type of policy and financial instruments that can meet the objectives of freedom, security and justice in the most efficient way.

2.4. Implementation, evaluation and flexibility

The Commission fully shares the importance the Hague Programme recognised to the implementation dimension and to the need of establishing mechanisms which can adequately evaluate and assess the implementation by Member States of measures in the area of freedom, security and justice.

The Constitution provides in Article III-260 for the adoption of measures enabling the Commission and Member States to evaluate impartially and objectively implementation of Union policies in this area. The Commission will present a Communication in early 2006 outlining the main objectives of the future mechanism and it intends to present proposals following the entry into force of the Constitution.

In the meantime, however, the European Council has invited the Commission to present an annual report on implementation of EU measures (a “scoreboard”) and to inform the European Parliament and national parliaments.

This will allow having a more complete overview of the state of play of policy regarding the area of freedom, security and justice and of the effective implementation of adopted measures by the Member States. The first Scoreboard will be presented in December 2005, and it will require the active participation of Member States, who will be invited to regularly notify their progress in implementing the adopted measures.

In addition, the European Council urged the Council to develop practical methods to facilitate timely implementation in all policy areas: requiring that proper plans for implementation are developed at national level, ensuring that the length of the implementation period is adequate, and examining regular progress reports from the Commission.

Given the general political environment in the area of freedom, security and justice, new political priorities are likely to emerge as a result of unexpected events, often of an international nature and dimension. The Action Plan has to be flexible and adaptable, particularly in the longer term, in order to allow for new priorities which may emerge in the coming years. The Constitution will permit a significant rationalisation of the legal and institutional framework. Here too, the European Council considered it important to allow for some flexibility, imposing a review of the Hague Programme.

3. IDENTIFYING CONCRETE ACTIONS

The Hague Programme requires that the Commission should translate the Hague objectives into concrete measures. To this end, the annex to this Communication consists of an Action Plan listing the main actions and measures to be taken over the next five years, including a specific set of deadlines for their presentation to the Council and the European Parliament.

Following the endorsement of the Tampere conclusions in 1999 and of the Hague Programme in 2004, the European Council should preserve its guiding role in the definition of strategic guidelines and the planning of future action in an area of freedom, security and justice. The Commission invites the Council to discuss this Communication and its accompanying Action Plan with a view to an endorsement by the June 2005 European Council.

ANNEX
